Bacteria may colonize the human genitourinary tract as commensal organisms, but the same bacteria may sometimes act as pathobionts, contributing to infectious or inflammatory syndromes in some hosts. This lecture will discuss the bacterial biota of the male and female reproductive tract and highlight potential pathobionts associated with increased risk of urethritis, cervicitis, and sexually transmitted diseases.